

Confidentiality of Records and Release of Confidential Information

Sharing your Private Information

All of the people supported by the Community Living Society have information written about them on the computer – ShareVision. Your information on the computer is about you, what you do, your money, and visits to your doctor.

Your information is for you, and it is private. You can share your information with your family, and the people that help you every day. You can look at your information any time you want. If you need help, you can ask your family, or one of the people who support you.

If other people want to look at your information, they have to ask you, and use a special paper called a Release of Information form.
